

Conference Crisis or continuity? Hoarding and deposition in Iron Age and Roman Britain, and beyond

Friday 11 March & Saturday 12 March 2016
BP Lecture Theatre, British Museum
Free, booking essential

This conference will explore the deposition and hoarding of coins and other artefacts in later prehistoric and Roman Britain and Europe, and will critically re-examine the evidence for social, economic and political instability during the third century AD.

Papers will cover topics including 'ritual' deposition in the Neolithic, Bronze Age and Iron Age, hoarding and status at rural sites in the Romano-British countryside, the Piercebridge Roman river metalwork deposits, the significance of landscape for Iron Age and Roman coin hoards, Britain and the continent in the 3rd century AD, Carausius, Allectus and the British Empire, and hoarding patterns and monetary change.

Speakers: Roger Bland, University of Leicester/British Museum, Tom Brindle, University of Reading, Kevin Butcher, University of Warwick, Adrian Chadwick, University of Leicester, Philip de Jersey, University of Oxford, Simon Esmonde Cleary, University of Birmingham, Duncan Garrow, University of Reading, Eleanor Ghey, British Museum, Richard Hobbs, British Museum, Helle Horsnæs, National Museum of Denmark, Fleur Kemmers, University of Frankfurt, Sam Moorhead, British Museum, Adam Rogers, University of Leicester, Nico Roymans, Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam, Alex Smith, University of Reading, Philippa Walton, University of Oxford, David Wigg Wolf, German Archaeological Institute, and Rachel Wilkinson, University of Leicester.
