

Cosmologies of care: Caring in technoscience worlds

Friday 13th May

12:00pm – 4:30pm

VENUE:

Attenborough Arts Centre
Lancaster Road, LE1 7HA

can care politicise studies of science and technology?
how then might we theorise care?

A colloquium organised by The Centre for Philosophy and Political Economy funded by University of Leicester School of Management

with guests

How to begin to care – about deformed leaf bugs, for example, in the aftermath of Chernobyl

Astrid Schrader

University of Exeter

Relating as Caring: A Trans-contextual Conversation on Practices of Care in Hospital Hygiene and Anthropomatic Robotics

Pat Treusch

Technical University Berlin, Germany

Käthe von Bose

University Paderborn, Germany

Title to be confirmed

Blanca Callén

Lancaster University

Caring for the Coast: Making Coastal Naturecultures

Friederike Gesing

Bremen University, Germany

Registration

Registration is free, but to help us in arranging catering, please register by clicking here

Starting from the efforts of many feminist activists and academics claiming the importance of making care a central issue for thinking politics in more than human worlds, this workshop is dedicated to discuss the theme of care putting at the center the analysis of situated practices of caring. Front-staging the corporeal, emotional and relational dimensions of care as important political and epistemic matters, this workshop constitutes an invitation for thinking care within the many interdependencies that populate ‘our’ technoscience worlds.

A cosmology implies more than a world system view; it embraces the mystical, magical, spiritual, philosophical, ethical, practical and ethno-ontological textures of life. To speak then of cosmologies of caring opens dialogue on how an implicit or explicit relation to the cosmos shapes care practices.