Welcome

Join us to celebrate the written word at the third Literary Leicester festival in the inspiring surroundings of the award-winning David Wilson Library at the University of Leicester.

This year the festival extends to a fourth day and embraces an even wider range of events including poetry, the novel, feminism, writing on history and the King James Bible. On Saturday afternoon there is an exciting mix of workshops and storytelling for younger readers. Between events there will be an opportunity to meet the writers, buy a book or look round our award-winning University Library.

We look forward to welcoming you to what promises once more to be a stimulating and thought-provoking literary event.

Festival organisers:
David Wilson Library: Christine Fyfe
School of English: Holly Furneaux, Catherine Morley, Martin Stannard

The Day Before Yesterday: Re-visiting Post-War Britain

Chair: Tom Holland

The past, we are often told, is a foreign country: they do things differently there. But in the last few years, two of Britain’s most talented historians have shed new light on the day before yesterday, bringing alive the vanished world of post-war Britain for a new generation of readers.

In the books of David Kynaston, (Austerity Britain, Family Britain) and Dominic Sandbrook (Never Had It So Good, White Heat, State of Emergency), we are catapulted back to the threadbare Forties, the booming Fifties, the swinging Sixties and the gaudy Seventies, to a world that seems so familiar and yet so remote.

This event brings together for the first time the two popular historians of modern Britain to discuss how we have changed as a nation over the last half-century, and how they go about recreating a disappearing world.

Wednesday 10 November

David Kynaston was born in 1951 and has been a professional historian since the 1970s. He has written extensively on the City of London, including a four-volume history of the City between 1815 and 2000. His current project is a history of Britain between 1945 and 1979, of which the first two volumes are the best-selling Austerity Britain (chosen by the Sunday Times as its Book of the Decade) and Family Britain.

Dominic Sandbrook is one of Britain’s best-known historians. Born in 1974 and educated at Oxford and Cambridge, he has written about both American and British history, including his acclaimed bestsellers on the 1950s and 1960s, Never had it so good and White Heat, which the Daily Telegraph chose as one of the “books that defined the Noughties”. In 2007 Waterstones named him as one of their “25 Authors for the Future”. His new book, State of Emergency, tells the story of Britain in the early 1970s: the age of strikes, sitcoms, gay rights and glam rock.

Tom Holland is an author and historian. His first work of history, Rubicon: The Triumph and Tragedy of the Roman Republic, won the Hessell-Tiltman Prize for History and was shortlisted for the Samuel Johnson Prize. His second, Persian Fire: The First World Empire and the Battle for the West, won the Anglo-Hellenic League’s Runciman Award. His new book, Millennium: The End of the World and the Forging of Christendom is out now, published by Little, Brown.

Grevel Lindop and Matt Merritt read from their poetry

Chair: Rory Waterman

Grevel Lindop was born in Liverpool and now lives in Manchester, where he was formerly Professor of English at the Victoria University. Carcanet Press has published six collections of his poems, most recently Selected Poems (2001) and Playing With Fire (2006). His prose books include The Opium-Eater: A Life of Thomas De Quincey; A Literary Guide to the Lake District; and Travels on the Dance Floor, which was a Radio 4 Book of the Week and was shortlisted as Authors’ Club Best Travel Book, 2009. His essays and reviews have appeared in many journals including The Economist, The Guardian, The Independent, and the Times Literary Supplement. He has won the Poetry London Prize and the Stafford Poetry Prize. He is currently writing a biography of the poet, novelist and theologian Charles Williams for Oxford University Press.

Alice Oswald reads from her poetry

Chair: Nick Everett

Alice Oswald is a poet whose sharply observant and warmly imaginative engagement with the natural world has won her a wide readership and many awards. She has published five collections, the best known probably being Dart (winner of the 2002 T.S. Eliot Prize), an extended work in verse and prose celebrating the life and culture of the River Dart in Devon where she lives and works as a gardener. Her latest collection, Weeds and Wild Flowers (2009), received the inaugural Ted Hughes Award for new work in poetry. ‘What’s startling is the sheer bravura, the idiosyncrasy, the uniqueness of the work’, Tim Supple, one of the judges, commented. ‘It’s extremely rooted and almost unfashionably English and rural, and is something that is very right for a Ted Hughes Award.’

Gordon Campbell and David Crystal discuss the King James Bible

2011 is the 400th anniversary of the publication of the King James Bible. This event brings together the authors of two newly published studies of the history and language of the world’s greatest book.

Gordon Campbell tells in Bible: the story of the King James Version 1611-2011 the fascinating and complex story of how this translation came to be commissioned, of who the translators were, and of how the translation was accomplished. The story does not end with the printing of that first edition, but introduces the subsequent generations who edited and interacted with the text.

The King James Bible “has contributed far more to English in the way of idiomatic or quasi-proverbial expressions than any other literary source.” So wrote David Crystal in 2004. In Begat; the King James Bible & the English Language he returns to the subject not only to consider how a work published in 1611 could have had such influence on the language, but how it can still do so when few regularly hear the Bible and fewer still hear it in the language of Stuart England.

No other version of the Bible however popular (such as the Good News Bible) or imposed upon the Church (like the New English Bible) has had anything like the same influence. David Crystal shows how its words and phrases have over the centuries found independent life in the work of poets, playwrights, novelists, politicians, and journalists, and how more recently they have been taken up with enthusiasm by advertisers, Hollywood, and hip-hop.

Gordon Campbell is Professor of Renaissance Studies at the University of Leicester. His recent work on Milton, all for Oxford University Press, includes a collaborative monograph on the Miltonic De Doctrina Christiana manuscript (2007) and a new scholarly biography of Milton (2008); both volumes have won the Hanford Prize for the best monograph of the year.

David Crystal is Honorary Professor of Linguistics at the University of Wales, Bangor. His bestselling books include The Stories of English, The Fight for English, and his autobiography Just a Phrase I’m Going Through: My Life in Language.

Joanne Harris
Chair: Holly Furneaux

Joanne Harris was born in Barnsley in 1964, of a French mother and an English father. She attended Wakefield Girls’ High School and Barnsley Sixth Form College before going on to St Catharine’s College, Cambridge to study modern and medieval languages. For fifteen years she taught modern languages at Leeds Grammar School before finally giving up teaching in 2000 to write full time. She is the author of eleven novels, including the bestselling Blackberry Wine, Five Quarters of an Orange and Coastliners, a book of short stories, Jigs and Reels, and two cookbooks, The French Kitchen and The French Market, co-written with Fran Warde. Chocolat was shortlisted for the Whitbread Best Novel Award in 1999 and was made into an Oscar nominated film in 2001. Her latest novel, Blueeyedboy was published earlier this year and was described by The Times as ‘brilliantly atmospheric and at times heartbreaking’ and by the Daily Express as ‘an ingenious, gripping read’. Her hobbies are listed in Who’s Who as ‘mooching, lounging, strutting, strumming, priest-baiting and quiet subversion of the system’. She plays bass guitar in a band first formed when she was 16 and is currently studying Old Norse.

Dominic Kelly, storyteller

Dominic Kelly is a performance storyteller with a growing national reputation for his performances at major festivals across the UK. Through flowing narrative and vivid imagery, and his dynamic and subtle feel for pace and mood, Dominic draws audiences into the emotional landscape of the story. His wide and versatile repertoire includes folktales, myths and legends from the British Isles and around the world.

‘Fantastic … the children were spellbound.’
Yealand CE Primary School, Lancashire

Dominic Kelly traces his passion for folk tales and legends back to the rugged beauty of the Cumbrian mountains where he grew up. He studied Environmental Science at the University of Stirling before gaining a PGCE and teaching in primary and secondary schools. In 2000, after experiencing oral performance storytelling, Dominic was inspired to become a full-time professional storyteller. In 2009 he was awarded the New Directions Commission for the Cambridge Storytelling Festival.
