Chartered Teacher of English

A professional designation
for teachers of English

“Putting together my Chartered Teacher of English application was an excellent way to take stock of my career and realise my commitment to English as a subject. The designation both recognises my professional expertise and acknowledges my achievements beyond the classroom.”

Our experts in education can provide support for your Continuing Professional Development (CPD), including a new professional designation for English teachers in the UK, Chartered Teacher of English (CTE).

The status of Chartered Teacher confers a professional distinction on its holder in recognition of a high level of general expertise in the subject area, as well as indicating an ongoing commitment to personal professional development.

Chartered Teacher of English encourages continuing commitment to English as a subject as well as to teaching as a profession.

If you...

- have an English degree or equivalent
- have been teaching English for at least four years
- have an ongoing commitment to continuing professional development
- embed your CPD in your teaching
- belong to a recognised professional English subject association

...then you are an ideal candidate for Chartered Teacher of English.

The designation will be ratified by the English Association whose Royal Charter, granted in 2006, enables it to do so on behalf of the whole English subject teaching community.

There are two annual deadlines for applications, 30 June and 30 November. Applicants should initially request or download an application form and notes of guidance.

About the English Association

The English Association exists to further knowledge, understanding and enjoyment of English, and to contribute to the development of English language studies. We want English to be recognised as widely as possible as an essential element of education and community.

Our members include primary and secondary school teachers, examiners, students, lecturers, researchers, performers, writers, librarians, editors and publishers. Through such a diverse membership we foster the discussion of teaching methods and respond to national issues, contributing to government and other consultations on English.

There are opportunities to network with colleagues and leading practitioners and special interest groups cover a broad range of subjects, from the history of books through to contemporary women's literature and poetry of the Great War. We organise conferences, lectures, and competitions, and produce a range of publications that includes books and journals for schools, scholars and general readership.

The Association was founded in 1906 and is the only learned society and English subject association to span English study from primary to higher education, as well as the general reader. We are a registered charity, granted a Royal Charter in 2006.
