The following module specifications reflect the most current planning for module delivery in the 2021/22 academic year. In planning for module delivery in 2021/22 the University will continue to respond to the UK government’s projected road map, and also to any further relevant national developments and public health requirements relating to the coronavirus pandemic. The University will continue to develop our approach to delivery and assessment in 2021/22 and these specifications may be subject to change in the event of updating national guidance or public health requirements. The specifications will be updated as soon as practically possible to reflect changes as they arise.

Guided Independent Study: Indicative Activities

Students are expected to engage in guided independent study to develop their knowledge, understanding and skills. For this module, guided independent study will include:

- Reading and reflecting on essential and recommended material from the electronic reading list
- Preparation for tutorials, including for group discussions
- Planning, preparation and writing of assessed coursework
- Revision from notes and further reading

Within this module, students will additionally be supported in their guided independent study with:

- Structured feedback with reflective comments provided on assessed work;
- Set reading supported with structured questions with follow on discussion and feedback in tutorials;
- Tutor feedback during office hours;
- Assessment preparation sessions
Intended Learning Outcomes

Anarchy, war, nations, borders, colonialism, security, capitalism and globalisation: these are only some of the key concepts that International Relations as a discipline is concerned with. This module provides a broad overview of the current field of International Relations, exploring how scholars make sense of the systems, processes and events that define contemporary global politics. Exploring and interrogating these concepts allows us to ask questions such as:

- Are states still the most important actors in shaping the world around us?
- What are the causes of war and can they be avoided?
- What does it mean for states and individuals to be secure and is this the same thing?
- Is the age of empire and colonialism over?

By the end of this module you will have an understanding of different ways of untangling some of the core puzzles in contemporary global politics. Giving you a grounding in the fundamental concepts, theories and approaches to the discipline of International Relations, this module paves the way for a more rigorous understanding of the world around you and your place within it.

This module aims to provide a foundation for the study of International Relations by giving a broad overview of the key concepts and debates that have shaped and defined research within the discipline. This foundation will require students to rigorously engage with the major conceptual and theoretical approaches within the field. This material is designed in order for students to be able to interpret, explain and analyse the major trends, dynamics and events that define contemporary global politics: from the ‘migrant crisis’ to climate change. By the end of the module, students should be able to:

- Provide an account of the primary focus of International Relations and the debates that have shaped the discipline since its inception;
- Demonstrate an understanding of the core concepts which define contemporary IR scholarship;
- Apply these concepts in order to produce rigorous accounts of major trends, dynamics and events within contemporary global politics;
- Critically engage with the assumptions, limits and omissions of these concepts in order to challenge ‘common sense’ understandings of IR.
